Clear skies and trees cleared of their leaves after recent rains make it easier to spot migratory geese and other birds either passing through or leaving. Strong southerly winds may back them up as they wait for north winds to carry them south with less energy expended.

Sun

Jupiter E and Saturn SE at dusk, Mars south at dawn.

§ Wild turkeys are separating, with hens joining their offspring into larger flocks, while the male jakes go off by themselves. Overwintering crow flocks are arriving, hawks are common, perched on power poles, in trees and fence posts, looking for a meal. Sparrows can be spotted in brush and grasses, and winter bird flocks will be increasingly common sights—time to start up those bird feeders if you haven't already!

§ Deer continue to be more and more active, so be careful if you are driving, especially after dark.

§ Freshly fallen leaves will create valuable insulation to woodland soils, provide overwintering habitat for many invertebrates and insulation in packrat and squirrel nests, help retain moisture, provide organic matter to the soil, and when dry, create an early warning signal of predators trying to sneak up on prey.

§ Despite chances of rain, or maybe because of it, this week looks to be another great time to take a hike in the area woodlands, prairies, rivers, wetlands, and/or reservoirs. Wet vegetation is more colorful than dry!
